From the N. O. Courier, May 23. AN INDIAN EXECUTION.

Through the politeness of Mr. Barstow, says the Natchitochez Chronicle of the 17th ult., the agent of the government for conducting the late Choctaw emigration from Mississippi to the West, we are permitted to publish the tollowing extracts from the journal of W. R. Douglas, giving an account of the execution of a young Choctaw, according to the law of that race. Indians procured whiskey in spite of the sell them any, and in spite of the warm remonstrances of the government agents. The consequence was disorder and fighting among many of the Indians. While the brother of Ty-ah, and another Indian were engaged in a fight, he came up to the rescue of his brother, and gave the other Indian a blow which produced death .-Blood for blood is the stern law of the savage race; and, without a murmur, he submitted to the fate awarded to him by his judges. The murder was perpetrated on the 15th of March:

[Extract from the Journal.]

MARCH 17 .- This night was the time selecad for the execution of the Indian who had committed the murder at Bond's store. The friends of the deceased had demanded his ses as follows:blood, and their savage law was ready to give it. From the night of the 15th, to that of the own mind, anything but favorable to that race which stands first among the human species. A white man, surrounded by similar circumstances, would have thought only of his personal safety; no desire to make reparation for a wrong; no regard for the honor of his family would have influenced him; his education would have prompted him to steal the fleetest horse in the camp, and in thirty-six hours, Texas would have had another inhabitant.

On the 18th, the Division united at Miller's Bluff on the Ouachita. On the 19th, the Indians held a council and determined that Tv. ah should die. He will be shot to-morrow. Our detention at this point has forced us to become unwilling spectators of the most tragical scene either of us ever witnessed. The mournful death strong and the savage warwhoop informed us that Ty-ah's moments Dressed with more than usual elegance, after the peculiar fashion of his race, and surrounded by his friends, he approaches the place selected, and throws himself full length upon the earth, that the measure of his future home might be taken. The grave was completed: the sun was high in the heavens, and the stern decree of the council must be enforced. Tyah is dead, and he died the death of the brave! Unflinching he looked death in the face .-With a strong yell of defiance to his enemies, and the kind word of parting to his friends, he walked firmly up to the brink of that grave in which his remains were to be shortly entombed. He attered no complaint of the savage law which had condemned him; he made no reproaches against the more savage judges that had enforced that law, but with a composure which could only be inculcated by the stern religion of their fathers, he bared his bosom, and from the unerring rifle of his deadly foe, received the shot that he believed was t send him forth upon the happy hunting-grounds promised him by the great and good Spirit of his race. The report of the rifle was instantly followed by the wild, unearthly shrieks of his wife and kindred. They threw themselves upon his body, and began that plaintive wailing, peculiar to that people, in a manner that drew tears from every eye.

They buried him as became a warrior, with rifle and pouch by his side. In death he was arrayed in the same fanciful garb which in life had so graced his manly form.

His grave is now filled up-the blood-thirsty law of his race is satisfied—the kindred of Cun-no-antam-be have had their revenge! Tyah has preserved the honor of his family, and how the stillness of the night is interrupted only by the wailing of his wife, his children. and his aged mother.

The pieces, after having been fitted by the carpenter and joiner for their places, are introduced into an immense iron cylinder, which is then exhausted by an air pump. A solution of the sulphate of iron is then ejected which immediately enters into the exhausted pores of the wood. The wood is then withdrawn, and placed again in a similar vacum, in a solution of muriate of lime, which coming into contact with the sulphate of iron within the wood, decomposes it, and forms an insoluble sulphate of lime, gypsum, within the wood; and the muriate of iron, the other new compound, goes about its business. These two young men married two sisters, both girls of good education, daughters of the Hekim Crummen. Bashy. The two husbands not being over rich, and their young wives not having any immediate dowry, the brothers-in-law determined to inhabit the same house and to share expenses. This proposition being agreed to by the families, a good house was selected, containing two commodious suites of apart-

But this is not the case. The two sisters inhabit the same sitting room in the harem, and the two men divide the same apartment in the salamlyk; but each wife has her distinct chambers, into which the husband of the other never enters, so that Dervish Effendi has never set eyes on the unveiled face of his sister-in-law, and Emin Bey has never looked upon the uncovered features of his brother-in-law's wife. Thus the two ladies are as complete strangers to their respective brothers-in-law as if they were living under distinct roofs.
